Attitude of Gratitude

Having an attitude of gratitude is not always an easy transition, especially when trying to make it a habit. However, expressing gratitude about the people and things we have in our lives really does change our wellbeing. We talk about gratitude with our students all year long, but we really highlight it in the month of November. Gratitude, specifically sharing it, has real scientific benefits such as: facilitating contentment (joy), compassion, promotes physical health, and strengthens relationships to name a few. We think that it’s important for our students to see and share the people, events, and things that they are grateful for.

Our 5th grade, specifically, will have an evening of gratitude sharing, and each day our students will have opportunities to share a gratitude with someone or journal about it. We also encourage our staff to share gratitudes and "pay it forward" through a variety of ways. After doing this for the last couple of years, I can attest that the level of happiness and contentment really does rise.

I've attached an article from psychology today regarding the benefits of having an attitude of gratitude if you would like to read more about it.

"The Benefits of Cultivating an Attitude of Gratitude"

As an army brat myself, this day holds a special place in my heart, even though every day is a good day to thank a veteran. Originally this day was meant to celebrate world peace and the end of World War I, Veterans day has evolved into a celebration of gratitude and thanks to our former and currently serving members of our military forces.

We will be holding our annual Veterans Day celebration on Monday, November 11th to honor and give gratitude for the sacrifices that our military forces and their families have made. We will begin our day at the flag pole with the pledge and then our guests will have the opportunity to hear our students sing several patriotic songs.

Invitations have gone out to all families in October.

From New Haven Elementary, we would like to thank all veterans of all branches! Thank you for your bravery, sacrifices, and examples that you have set. THANK YOU FOR YOUR SERVICE!
